

ACTION AGAINST THE 'ENGLISH'!

COME TO BOKERLEY DITCH AND UNPICK THE 'EDGE' OF ENGLAND!

The 'Men of Wessex' claim descent from superior 'Saxon' 'bloodstock', believing themselves to 'be' in a "chosen" 'region' which must be 'reborn'. David Caedyfael claims to be 'pure' but we - through a close examination of Bokerley Ditch (as text), the earthwork which allegedly 'edges' the 'heartland' of 'Wessex' - can prove otherwise. Cerdic, the founder of the 'Saxon' kingdom, was neither 'Saxon' nor 'Jute'. He was a replicant, something imagined within text - a cultural installation - which we shall 'erase'.

"Celt/Saxon or Celt/Anglian boundaries often had linear earthworks - banks and ditches - long before Offa's Dyke, Wansdyke, Devil's Dyke, Roman Rigg, etc. - so Bokerley ditch is plausible, if not authentic or unique in how it was faked. Such an extensive antiquarian folly is unusual," so early in the modern period, but these others reveal the knowledge of this method was around in the 15th and 16th centuries. Henry VIII himself may have sketched this line on a map to hold down 'his' kingdom in its web of lines', it has been known since. Older forgings in chalk were sometimes recycled, as can be seen in the 'Dorset Cursus' which was extended by the Royal Air Corps in 1917-18 and used as a runway.

Bi-planes rose over hillfort and ditch, placing markers in the air like boundary stones, beating symbols into blue clouds over hay field and water-meadow. Such was their use. Now they are said to contain 'energy', which is amusing, poetic even, and absurd," said Dr. Mintern.

Meet at The Cartwheel, Whitsbury (Hants.)

Three miles north of Fordingbridge

SUNDAY 26th July 1998 -12.30pm - 2.30pm

We shall proceed from the pub to Bokerley Ditch by car and then walk to the 'Dorset' Cursus, inspecting other early modern English 'antiquities' on the way.

THE WORKING CLASS HAS NO COUNTRY!
